ZANZIBAR, Feb. 11.—W. Astor Chanler has arrived at Mombasa. He is in good health.

The news of the safety of William Astor Chanler will be more than gratifying to many people of New York. He is a cousin of William Waldorf Astor, and has for a sister-in-law that distinguished young American literary woman who wrote "The Quick and the Dead."

Early in the summer of 1892 it was announced with a conspicuous flourish of trumpets in the London press that an expedition fitted out entirely at private expense and led by a bold and enterprising American would go into the heart of the Dark Continent of Africa and endeavor to accomplish many things which other explorers had failed to do.

WILLIAM ASTOR CHANLER.

Mr. Chanler was at that time only twenty-five years old, and his youth made his proposed undertaking seem doubly hazardous. But no surprise was manifested by the people in this city or in Mr. Chanler's classmate at Harvard at the fact that he had gone to private Africa, even to Mount Kenya, the snow-clad mountain from which he supposed to have the source of the Victoria Nyanza, for it was known that immediately after graduation Mr. Chanler went to Africa in company with one or two other adventurous companions, and although not actuated by the same scientific spirit of the explorer, spent several months in the wilds and killed a large variety of big game. During this first visit of the young American to the Dark Continent his tribe valuated through Mashland and around Mount Kilimanjaro.

The purposes of his second and present expedition were explained by Mr. Chanler in an interview with a newspaper correspondent in London just before his departure from that city in June, 1892.

"Our route," he said, "will lie after leaving Kilimanjaro in the direction of the great lake from an unknown source in the Abyssinian Mountains, and also perhaps to the head of the river, running into the lake from the north-west, the existence of which is never conjectured. At this time we hope to reach Lake Shambala and then march east north-east to the Juba River, through, perhaps, 50 miles of the unknown portion of the earth's surface."

After an American bride, Prince Andre Poniatowski, a descendant of Polish Kings, is here for that purpose.

Prince Andre Poniatowski, a descendant of Polish Kings, an Italian by birth, and a resident of Paris, arrived yesterday on the North German Lloyd steamer Spreewald to come to America to marry Miss Emma Burke, ward of G. C. Chapman, of Madison, Wis., who is reported to have a fortune of $60,000,000 made in land speculations.

Immediately on arrival the Prince went to the Warden, but did not register. It was soon known, however, that he was in town, and he had many callers, but seemed almost to all he expects to leave Friday for California.
